

IEPFA - NCAER Event Report 2025

The National Council of Applied Economic Research (NCAER) organised an impactful session titled “Women Empowerment through Financial Freedom” with the objective of creating awareness about the role of financial literacy and economic independence in empowering women. The event aimed to sensitise students towards understanding how financial knowledge can contribute to informed decision-making, self-reliance, and long-term socio-economic empowerment.

The session focused on key aspects of financial freedom, including the importance of savings, investments, and financial planning in enabling women to achieve independence. It also highlighted the broader economic and social implications of women's participation in financial systems and decision-making processes. The discussions provided valuable insights into how financial awareness can help bridge gender gaps and promote inclusive growth.

The event witnessed the participation of approximately 450-500 students, who engaged actively throughout the session. The interactive discussions encouraged students to reflect on real-life challenges related to women's financial independence and explore practical approaches to addressing them. The session proved to be informative and thought-provoking, leaving a lasting impact on the attendees.

Overall, the event successfully fulfilled its objective of promoting awareness about women empowerment through financial freedom and inspired students to recognise the importance of economic literacy as a tool for social change.
