On the second day, the children were taught with the help of mathematics and English worksheets. These worksheets were designed to be simple, clear, and easy to follow, allowing the children to understand the tasks without feeling overwhelmed. The structured format of the worksheets helped in maintaining a steady flow of learning and ensured that each child could work at their own pace.

The children worked through the worksheets with guidance and showed active participation throughout the process. They were attentive, curious, and willing to try the questions on their own before seeking help. This not only encouraged independent thinking but also helped build their confidence. The interactive nature of the activity kept them engaged, and they responded positively to the learning approach.

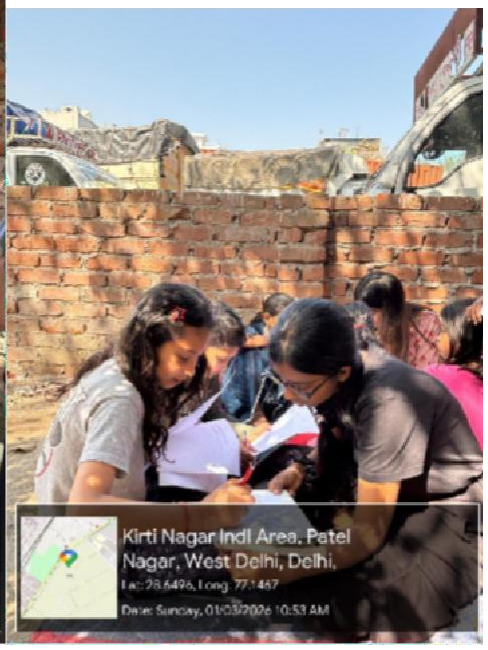

The use of worksheets created a balanced environment where learning felt both organized and enjoyable. It allowed the facilitators to give individual attention wherever needed while also keeping the group collectively involved. The children seemed comfortable asking questions and clarifying their doubts, which contributed to a more open and supportive atmosphere.

Along with the learning activities, reels were also shot to capture moments from the day. This added a fun and creative element to the session. The children were excited to be part of it and participated enthusiastically, bringing energy and joy to the environment. It also helped in documenting the experience in a lively and engaging way.

Overall, the day was smooth, productive, and well-paced. The use of worksheets played a key role in making the learning process structured yet flexible. The children remained involved and interested throughout, making it a meaningful and enjoyable experience for everyone present.
