The third visit of the program was celebrated on the occasion of International Women's Day, making it both meaningful and educational for the students. The day was focused on spreading awareness about gender equality and helping children understand the importance of respecting and appreciating the role of women in society. Introducing these ideas at an early stage is important, as it helps in building values such as empathy, gratitude, and respect. The aim of the session was to create awareness in a simple and relatable way so that students could connect these ideas to their daily lives and develop a more inclusive mindset.

To make the learning more engaging and practical, a creative workshop was conducted where students made personalized posters and used origami techniques to create small tokens of appreciation for their mothers. The children used photographs of their mothers and included them in their artwork, making the activity more personal and meaningful. This hands-on approach allowed students to express their feelings in a creative way while also improving their focus, coordination, and imagination. The activity helped them understand the concept of appreciation not just in theory but through action, making the experience more impactful.

Along with the creative work, short and simple speeches were delivered by the volunteers to explain the importance of International Women's Day. These talks were designed according to the students' level of understanding and focused on the achievements of women and the importance of supporting and respecting them. This helped provide context to the activities and ensured that students understood the purpose behind what they were doing, rather than just participating in it as a task.

The atmosphere remained positive and energetic throughout the session. To conclude the day, the students performed a choreographed dance to a popular song by Sourav Joshi, which added a fun and lively element to the event. The performance brought excitement and allowed students to participate freely and confidently. After this, volunteers and students worked together to create reels and take photographs, capturing the moments from the day. These recordings not only documented the activities but also highlighted the creativity, enthusiasm, and learning of the students in an engaging way.

Overall, the third day successfully combined awareness, creativity, and enjoyment. It helped students understand important social values while also giving them the opportunity to express themselves, making the experience both educational and memorable.
